

AN OUTLINE PROCEDURE FOR WRITING STRATEGICALLY

- Objective*
- I. Determine the general forms of organization one is writing in.
 - II. Determine the particularity of forms of organization one is writing in.
 - III. Determine the principal contradiction of forms of organization and their principal and non principal aspects.
 - IV. Always in the interest of the proletariat, one should suggest a tactical form of organization which would speak to building class solidarity and raising class consciousness

STEP II

- Subjective*
- I. Identify the general forms of struggle (fundamentally the conflict between capital & labor) in one's writing.
 - II. Identify the particularity of forms of struggle.
 - III. Identify the principal contradiction of forms of struggle and the principal and non principal aspects.
 - IV. Always in the interest of the proletariat, one should suggest united front work..

FOR EXAMPLE:

- I. The economic forms of organization. Bourgeois: the economic form of organization is the corporation. Proletariat: the economic form of organization is the labor union. Essence - production
 - II. Internal Harvester vs. AFL-CIO (?).
 - III. Management vs. union leadership. The principal aspect is management and non principal aspect weak leadership of the union.
 - IV. Organize election committees to vote in proletarian leadership.
- I. Forms of struggle. Bourgeois: the struggle to maintain its high rate of profits. Proletariat: the struggle to continuously procure the material means and human needs to assure its daily survival.
 - II. The company is planning a tactical lay-off ~~in~~ in order to get workers to maintain their obedience in production which will assure profit stability. Proletariat: the union leadership gives way to the economic threat of a lay-off.
 - III. The proletariat: the dominant side is the union leadership, and the subordinate side is the rank and file workers.
 - IV. Struggle for a rank and file movement within the local union to elect proletarian leadership.

The capitalist process of production is organized around the ideological class form of private property. Upon this ideological foundation of private ~~xxxx~~ property, the legal, political, educational, church, and financial institutions (the superstructures) are erected.

To make clear, the primary form of organization in the capitalist mode of production is personalized production organizations, corresponding with the ideological concepts of private property. Furthermore, the ownership of the means of social production are concentrated in the hands of private individuals, who are class connected thru the ideological belief in private property.

The universality of the internal relationship structure, inside of individualized production organizations, in the relations of production is the ideological relationship of domination and subordination, stemming from the ideological class form of private property, and so it is structurally design to assure the preservation of the private mode of appropriation of surplus values.

The advantage of being a member of a class who rules over a social system is that one has the ~~individual right~~ individual right to use the surplus value of production to meet one's ~~personal~~ personalized interest to further enrich one's self. However, it is presupposed, for this process to continue, that formal structures (representing conditions) are set up for workers of the productive forces to internalize values of individualism with the aim of preserving the ideological form of private property and in conformity with preserving the ideological relationship of domination and subordination, and whos functional aim it is to give ideological justficiation to the philosophcial rationalization of economic exploitation and social opprression.
